world with him

Todd served 22 years in United States Air Force Special Operations and retired as a full colonel. He commanded two squadrons and finished his flying career as one of two coalition pilots flying Russian Mi-17 helicopters with the Afghan National Army Air Corps in Afghanistan.

Todd left the military to become a two-time public education school superintendent. Within three years, he received the Colorado Association of Superintendents/Senior Administrators Excellence in Education Award.

Todd's major accomplishments center around driving strategic organizational change. His leadership improved mission-ready rates from 50 percent to 80 percent in one year, one of the highest rates in special operations at the time.

He is currently in his dissertation phase as a doctoral candidate in human and organizational learning at George Washington University and is a proud graduate of the United States Air Force Academy.
